Environmental Activists Deny Trump's 'Illegal' Energy Plans for Public Lands

Environmentalists denounced President Donald Trump's energy plans for public lands on Friday, saying they would go beyond the Supreme Court to continue their fight against the administration's efforts to open up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge for oil and gas exploration.

The memos penned by former FBI Director James Comey about his communications with then-President Barack Obama and Deputy Attorney General Sally Yates over the Russia investigation were released on Friday, providing new details about the Justice Department's investigation into potential collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia.

The memos, which were obtained by The New York Times, revealed that Comey had raised concerns with Yates about Trump's conversations with Russian officials, and that he sought to keep his staff informed about the investigation.

The Department of Natural Resources of Ohio said Friday that a homeowner filed a lawsuit against the pipeline, claiming he was not notified about a $6.1 million fine it imposed on the company for violating an agreement to improve water quality in the state's drinking water supply.

A Florida sheriff's deputy on Tuesday was accused of using his department's computer to look up personal information on a suspect.

Carlos Uresti began pressuring a client to invest in a Ponzi scheme, and the two had sex in the client's car to ensure his compliance, according to a verdict in a federal court.

In the months before Texas state Senator Carlos Uresti began pressuring a client to invest in a Ponzi scheme, they had sex in the client's car to ensure his compliance, according to a verdict in a federal court.

The Supreme Court ruled Monday that a North Carolina law that requires voters to present photo ID at the polls is constitutional, but with a warning that the law could be struck down if no significant evidence emerges of voter fraud.

Lebanon has displayed three stolen artifacts returned by US authorities this week, saying it has extradited to the United States a Russian citizen who is suspected of theft.

The Department of Natural Resources of Ohio said Friday that a homeowner filed a lawsuit against the pipeline, claiming he was not notified about a $6.1 million fine it imposed on the company for violating an agreement to improve water quality in the state's drinking water supply.