A rival company offers a service that's similar to ours, so we filed a lawsuit against them for patent infringement.

The sunken gold that was lost in the ocean in 1857, only to be found after 160 years in 2017, is a reminder of the value of perseverance and determination.

Several politicians were denied entrance to a basketball game because they were not white, highlighting the continued issue of discrimination.

Four Native American parents sued a school district for racism, claiming the school discriminated against their children.

A shroud of secrecy has fallen over the details surrounding the Miami Marlins' decision to cancel the immigration temporary protected status claim in 2017.

The wake of the Parkland school shooting and the inaction by the government has led to a push for more gun control measures.

A former Trump campaign official was denied immunity from prosecution for his involvement in a scheme.

Poll: Gun Control Likely to Shape Midterm Elections

The administration is stepping up its efforts to manage public lands and the national park system, and is facing pressure from state officials to alter its plan.

A new scientific study has shaken up the understanding of how the future climate will affect crops.

The French are using social media to help them find a soldier who went missing.

The threat of a rise in terrorist activity in France has led to an increased counterterror effort.

The United States is preparing to open its embassy in Jerusalem.

The leaders of the United Kingdom are presenting a united front in the wake of the decision to leave the European Union.

California is moving to call an end to the era of conversion therapy, which lawmakers believe to be a fraud.

The U.S. state party's annual convention in California is facing a challenge with the conservative Republicans.

Experts predict that a union bid to reorganize the National Park Service could see a follow-up in other national parks.

Maine is considering changing its electoral system, which could be the nation's first.

A union is bracing for the impact of President Donald Trump's policies.

A former Trump campaign official is facing charges for attempting to provide weapons to ISIS.

The military is paying millions to settle a lawsuit over military car leases.

A court is considering two cases regarding New York sewage and groundwater contamination in the eastern area of the state.